2013

NEW TOOLS IN WELFARE RESEARCH

In this anthology the quality of the Scandinavian Welfare model is highlighted from the perspective of children, old people, professionals who give support etc. to show how to use new tools in welfare research from a theoretical or methodological perspective or both. Social welfare is not only revealed by measuring people's levels of living and access to resources. It is also a cultural process and a first-hand experience for people. What is experienced as welfare or unfair can differ over time and in different situations and for different groups of people.

ELINOR BRUNNBERG & ELISABET CEDERSUND (EDS)
NSU Press Århus Universitetsförlag AB

The content of the book:

Contents

New tools for new times 15

Introduction 19
Elisabet Cedersund and Elinor Brunnberg
About the Swedish welfare system, rights and participation 20
Welfare research for new times 24
Meetings 24
Power 25
Participation 27
Conclusion 29
References 30

Paradigms, theories and methods in research on men's violence in intimate relationships 33
Christian Kullberg
Basic models of welfare research about gender: Structural versus actor-oriented perspectives, and constructivism versus essentialism 34
Theoretical concepts and theories in relation to violence in intimate relationships 40
Methodological procedures and methods: Qualitative versus quantitative approaches to studying violence 46
Analyses and interpretations 50
Conclusion and discussion 52
References 558

Narratives from children in vulnerable situations 59
Elinor Brunnberg
The 'outsider within' perspective 63
Children's standpoint or a child perspective 64
Research about childhood 65
Children as respondents 66
Interviewing children with a communicative disability 67
Narratives coloured by fear 70
Children exploited in child pornography crimes who do not reveal what happened 72
Children who witness family violence 74
Conclusions 75
References 80

The child as a linking interested party in the negotiating modern family 85
Kristina Larsson Sjöberg
The network family 87
The negotiating family in Scandinavia 89
Family and power 91
The child as an interested party 92
The 'new' Sociology of childhood 94
The child in the family 96
Linked family systems 97
The child as a linking interested party 99
Childhood and gender 101
Concluding discussion 103
References 1089

Focus groups with creative elements, PI-interviews 113
Elinor Brunnberg
The process in focus groups 114
Documentation 119
References 121

Using the vignette method in comparative welfare research 123
Elinor Brunnberg and Christian Kullberg
The vignette method 125
Authenticity of the vignette 127
The cultural relevance of the vignette 129
Comprehensive models for transformation 131
Possibility to generalize from the abstract to the concrete 133
Discussion 135
References 138
Appendix 142
Vignette example 142

How is methodological emancipation possible? Rethinking the potentials of multivariate methods for intersectional analyses 145
Osman Aytar
Theoretical and analytical considerations 147
Method and material 151
The embedded potentials of multivariate methods for intersectional analyses 153
Discussion and conclusions 163
References 166

Interactive research – A practical example and a critical assessment 171
Maria Bennich
What is action and interactive research 173
My own experience 175
The role of common sense 177
My own experience 178
The organisation of interactive research 183
My own experience 184
Summary and conclusion 187
References 190

Service provision in the welfare state – Care-taking, interaction and construction of meaning 193
Karl-Johan Johansen
The power perspective 199
The rationalistic perspective 199
The social constructivist perspective 200
Action 201
Interaction 203
Meaning 203
The construction of meaning/purpose 207
The maintenance of understanding/meaning 216
The meaning of relationships 217
The purpose of service provision 218
The purpose of service receiving 219
The meeting between the service provider and the service receiver 221
Meaningful situations 222

Situations without sense/meaning 224
Difference of opinion 225
Purpose and self determination 227
Welfare as a result of the construction of meaning/sense 228
A social constructivistic research perspective in social work 231
Summary 232
References 236

Everyday lives of older people with a dementia – Studies of interactions in elder care 239

Elisabet Cedersund

Welfare in later life 241
On communication and memory during the life course 242
Data and analysis 244
Results from the analysis of the encounters with Nora 245
Concluding remarks 252
Some final reflections in relation to the examples above 253
References 254

Policy language in the care for the aged in Japan and Sweden – Does it reflect or steer ideology? 255

Els-Marie Anbäcken

A glance in the rear-view mirror 256
Senior 2005 261
Tying the overview together 262
Some remarks on methodology and theoretical frame 263
The National Plan of Action for Policies Concerning the Elderly (NPAP) 264
Annual Report on Health and Welfare for 1989 (ARHW) 267
Annual Report on Health and Welfare for 1995–1996 271
Annual Report on Health and Welfare for 1998–1999 274
Hirakata municipality information pamphlet to citizens 279
Linköping municipality information brochure 281
Volunteer work 284
SENIOR 2005 and the revised National Care Insurance System in Japan 287
Conclusion 289
References 292

The use of political terms and the modernisation of the welfare state 295

Hans Petter Dahl Hansen

Introduction 296
Background 297
The welfare state, a system for creating welfare and harmony 298
The 'modern' as a political rhetorical tool 299
Language and power 302
New terms relating to capital are gaining ground 303
The different sides to rhetoric – examples from politics 304
Concluding comments 307
References 313

The Welfare State's 'Stepchildren' An intersectional perspective on ethnic relations and discrimination in Sweden 315

Mehrdad Darvishpour

A statistical picture of the situation for foreign-born persons in Sweden 317
Employment Levels 318

Unemployment 319
Income 320
Education 320
Health 321
Residential Segregation 322
Defining ethnicity and ethnic relations 323
Ethnicity: Characteristic or construction 324
An intersectional perspective on ethnic relations as power relations 326
Different perspectives on the vulnerability and segregation 328
of foreign-born persons
Cultural characteristics and their impact on the vulnerability 329
of foreign-born persons
Socio-economic background and its impact and on 330
the vulnerability of foreign-born persons
Discrimination and its impact and on the vulnerability 331
of foreign-born persons
Integration process and the three perspectives 333
Integration policy in Sweden: From assimilation to multiculturalism 336
A modest multicultural integration policy 337
Multiculturalism, transnational cultures, and 340
an anti-discrimination perspective
Afterword 344
References 348
Authors 355